Management Buy-out of Multepos

Established pharmacy EPoS specialists, Multepos Computer Systems Limited, have been re-acquired by the original founders and current management, after 3 years of ownership by the Torex Retail Solutions Group.

Following the deal, Tom Attwood, who originally established Multepos in 1993, will be returning as Managing Director, with Chris Browning reverting to the role of Operations Director. Part of the backing for the acquisition was provided by specialist software development fund, Continuum Systems, who have also committed to further investment, as and when required, to support the company's growth.

Tom Attwood explains, "This is an exciting development that should please all of our customers. The combination of a strengthened management team and new investment means that Multepos can significantly enhance its product offering to community pharmacies. With additional resources devoted to software development, product support and customer service, Multepos will be able to build upon its existing satisfied customer base of over 500 pharmacies."

The Company's most recent EPoS product, launched in January 2008, has been developed using the very latest Microsoft.Net technology. This makes the system not just one of the most widely used in the independent sector, but the most up-to-date as well – which means that companies investing in Multepos products today will be able to continue to use them for many years to come.

Tom Attwood adds, "Multepos is a fantastic company with a great past, but an even more exciting future. The systems that it supplies can make a real difference to independent pharmacies, helping them be more efficient, serve their customers better and above all, be more profitable. Our business philosophy is simple; we are committed to growing this business by supplying systems that deliver real business benefits, and supporting our customers with great service. With Multepos, we have both the products and the team to do just that."
